Selling and sending goods and services from the home country to a foreign country is known as exporting while buying goods and services and bringing them into the home country from a foreign country is known as importing. The import and export of goods can be done either directly or indirectly. When the firm itself approaches the overseas buyers or sellers and performs all the formalities related to import and export of goods, it is referred to as direct importing or exporting. When the firm's participation in the import and export operations is minimum and most of the formalities are carried out by some middlemen, it is referred to as indirect exporting or importing. In this case, firms don't directly deal with overseas customers.

Advantages:

- i. The easy way: It is the simplest way of gaining entry into international markets and does not involve any complex activity.
- ii. Less investment: It does not require much of investment in foreign countries.
- iii. Low risk: It does not carry much of the risks and requires less time.

Limitations:

- i. Since the goods move from one country to another country, it involves, additional packaging, transportation, and insurance cost is incurred in transferring the goods which increases the cost of the product.
 - ii. Less knowledge of the foreign market. Basically, the export firms produce goods in the home country and send their goods to foreign countries. Hence, export firms do not have much contact with the foreign market.
 - iii. No longer feasible when import restrictions exist in a foreign country.
32. Sole proprietorship refers to a form of business organisation which is owned, managed and controlled by an individual who is the recipient of all profits and bearer of all risks.
