
Chapter 7

Outcomes of Democracy

❖ Democracy's Outcomes

- Democracy is a form of government that creates opportunities for the citizen to achieve their goals.
- Democracy should produce a government that is both accountable and responsive to the needs and expectations of the citizens
- In a democracy, decisions are debated and negotiated upon. This makes them more acceptable and effective as compared to the other forms of government.
- Democracy is also a transparent form of government where citizens can question and enquire regarding the functioning of the government.
- However, democratic governments are not very efficient when it comes to sharing information with people.
- A democratic government is people's own government as people wish to be ruled by the representatives elected by them.

❖ Performance of Democracy

- Economic growth and development
 - Between 1950 and 2000, dictatorship as compared to democracy, has a higher rate of economic development. However, democracy is still preferred as it has several other positive outcomes.
- Reduction of inequality and poverty
 - Democracies are based on political equality but huge economic disparities.
- Accommodation of social diversity
 - Both the majority and the minority opinion must be considered for the efficient functioning of a democracy.
 - Rule of majority should not prevail in the fields of religion, language or race.
- Dignity and freedom of the citizens
 - Democracy promotes dignity and freedom to individuals.
 - Unequal factions of the society such as women and the people from discriminated castes and classes are also given equal status and opportunity of participation in the democratic process.
