CONSEQUENCES OF GLOBALIZATION

POLITICAL

POSITIVE

Boost in state capacity

NEGATIVE

Erosion of state capacity

POSITIVE

Greater flow of goods, capital, ideas & people

NEGATIVE

Restrictive policies & effect on economically weak
(Increases gap between rich & poor)

CULTURAL

Cultural heterogeneity

Cultural Homogenization

Political Consequences of Globalization are →

- a) Boost in state capacity (Positive)
- a) The primacy of the state remains the unchallenged basis of political community. States are consciously withdrawing from their welfare functions. Thus, globalisation doesn't affect state capacity, i.e., ability of governments to do what they do.

i) Instead, globalisation boosts state capacity. For eg, advancement of technology has enabled states to collect information about their citizens & rule better.

ii) Erosion of state capacity (Negative)

a) State capacity is the ability of governments to do what they do, it is ~~argued~~ argued that globalisation erodes state capacity. States are only performing core functions of law & order maintenance & national security, & are withdrawing from some of their earlier welfare functions.

b) Market becomes the prime determinant of economic priorities. Foreign entry & increased role of MNCs ~~have~~ <sup>have</sup> restricted government's ability to take decisions.

Economic consequences are →

i) Greater flow of goods, ideas & capital (Positive)
a) Globalisation has resulted in greater flow of goods due to removal of trade barriers

b) Advancement of technology & world wide interconnectedness has led to greater flow of ideas & capital.

Thus, the flows have become easier & smoother.

ii) Restrictive policies & effects on economically weak
a) Developed countries restrict the movement of people through their visa policies.

Some are worried about the effects of globalisation on those who are economically weak. It is feared that globalisation increases the gap between rich & poor.

Cultural consequences of globalisation are → Cultural heterogenisation (Positive)
No culture is static; cultures accept outside influences all the time. These influences may be positive if they enlarge our choice.
e.g. a burger & a masala doos are not substitutes for each other.

Thus, globalisation leads to cultural heterogenisation, a process by which each culture becomes more different & distinct.

Cultural Homogenization (Negative)
Globalisation leads to cultural homogenization
i.e. rise of an uniform culture. A uniform culture is not a global culture.

This is dangerous as it harms the traditional ways of living of people & causes the shrinkage of our rich global heritage.
