SECTION A- READING

20 Marks

- 1. Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow:

12x1
=12

Arjun was an architect, renowned for designing modern skyscrapers in bustling cities. His life was a whirlwind of deadlines, meetings, and blueprints, leaving little time for reflection. One Friday evening, while clearing his desk, he stumbled upon an old, faded photograph of his childhood home. The simple cottage nestled in the hills, surrounded by tall oak trees, brought a rush of memories—the sound of chirping birds, the scent of fresh rain, and his grandmother's stories by the fireplace. Her laughter, warm and contagious, echoed in his mind.

That night, he could not sleep. Tossing and turning, he realized it had been over 20 years since he last visited his ancestral home. On an impulse, he decided to take a break and revisit the place where he had spent his happiest days. This was not just a trip to a physical location but a journey to rediscover parts of himself lost in the chaos of adulthood.

The journey took five hours by car, weaving through highways and narrow mountain roads, followed by a 20-minute trek uphill. The steep path, lined with vibrant wildflowers, contrasted sharply with the grey monotony of the city. When Arjun reached the crest of the hill, the sight of the old cottage took his breath away. Time seemed to have stood still. The wooden structure, though weathered, still held its charm. The red-tiled roof, overgrown shrubs in the garden, and a swing hanging from the oak tree felt like pieces of a puzzle falling into place.

Pushing open the creaky gate, Arjun stepped onto the porch. The door was unlocked, and a faint musty smell greeted him. Dust motes danced in the sunlight streaming through the windows. Inside, furniture was covered in white sheets, and the ticking of an old clock echoed faintly. Each corner seemed to whisper stories of laughter, footsteps, and secrets from the past.

In his grandmother's room, Arjun found a leather-bound journal on the bedside table. Curious, he opened it and began reading. The diary was filled with entries about her daily life, hopes, and dreams. One entry caught his attention: "Arjun is a curious child, always asking questions about the world. He dreams of building things that touch the sky. I hope he never loses that wonder." Tears welled up in his eyes. He had fulfilled his childhood dream of becoming an architect, but in the process, he had forgotten the simple joys of life. His work consumed him, leaving little room for curiosity or connection.

Exploring further, Arjun found a box of childhood treasures—hand-drawn sketches, toy cars, and a model of a treehouse he had designed but never built. Holding the model, he felt a pang of regret. He had promised his grandmother he would build the treehouse, but life had taken him in a different direction. That promise, once so meaningful, had been buried under layers of ambition and responsibility.

Determined to honour his promise, Arjun decided to spend the weekend building the treehouse. He found old tools in the shed, along with planks of wood and nails. Though years had passed since he worked with his hands, the process was strangely therapeutic. The rhythmic sound of hammering, the scent of freshly cut wood, and the rustling leaves transported him to a simpler time.

As he worked, memories of his grandmother's encouragement and belief in him filled his heart. She had always said the best creations were those made with love and intention. By Sunday evening, the treehouse stood proudly on the oak tree—simple yet sturdy. It wasn't just a physical structure but a tribute to his grandmother and a testament to their shared dreams.

Climbing up, Arjun sat inside, gazing at the breath-taking view of the valley. The golden hues of the setting sun painted the landscape in shades of orange and pink. For the first time in years, he felt contentment. The weight of deadlines and expectations melted away, replaced by a profound connection to the present.

Before leaving the next morning, Arjun planted a sapling near the treehouse, symbolizing new beginnings. The act felt symbolic, as though he were planting a part of himself back into the soil of his roots. Locking the cottage, he left with a promise to return. The visit had rekindled something within him—a connection to his roots and a sense of purpose beyond deadlines and skyscrapers.

Back in the city, Arjun carried the memories of his weekend like a precious treasure. He made small changes in his life—taking breaks to sketch for pleasure, spending weekends in nature, and reconnecting with old friends. His architectural designs began to reflect a new sensibility, blending modernity with nature, inspired by the harmony he had rediscovered in his ancestral home.

Months later, one of his projects, a community centre surrounded by greenery, won an award for sustainable design. During his acceptance speech, Arjun spoke about the importance of finding balance in life and staying connected to one's roots. He ended with a quote from his grandmother's diary: "Never lose your wonder."

Years passed, but Arjun kept his promise to visit the cottage regularly. The treehouse became a cherished spot, not just for him but also for his children. It stood as a bridge between generations, a place where stories were shared, dreams nurtured, and the spirit of wonder kept alive.

2. Read the poem LOSS AND GAIN by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow given below: 4x1=4

When I compare
 What I have lost with what I have gained,
 What I have missed with what attained,
 Little room do I find for pride.

I am aware
 How many days have been idly spent;
 How like an arrow the good intent
 Has fallen short or been turned aside.

But who shall dare
 To measure loss and gain in this wise?
 Defeat may be victory in disguise;
 The lowest ebb is the turn of the tide.

SECTION C-TEXTBOOK

32 Marks

7 (I) Attempt any one of the two extracts (A) and (B) given below:

1x6=6

(A) Read the extracts given below and answer the questions that follow.

"She did her job well, and for a long time, above all during the war years, when reality was more sinister than nightmares. Only she could decide at breakfast what each should do that day, and how it should be done, until her predictions became the sole authority in the house. Her control over the family was absolute: even the faintest sigh was breathed by her order. The master of the house died at about the time I was in Vienna, and had the elegance to leave her a part of his estate on the condition that she continue dreaming for the family until her dreams came to an end."
(I Sell My Dreams)

- i. Which 'job' is being talked about in the extract?
  - ii. What did 'she' decide at breakfast each day?
  - iii. How was her authority described in the family?
  - iv. What condition did the master of the house place on 'she' after his death?
  - v. How did the master of the house pay her after his death?
  - vi. Which word is a good synonym for 'sinister'?
- A. Ominous                      B. Benign
C. Condemnation              D. Soldering

OR

(B) Read the extracts given below and answer the questions that follow.

All the seas of the world tumbled about her heart. He was drawing her into them: he would drown her. She gripped with both hands at the iron railing.
'Come!'
No! No! No! It was impossible. Her hands clutched the iron in frenzy. Amid the seas she sent a cry of anguish.
(Eveline)

- i. Who is 'he' in the above extract?
  - ii. What metaphor is used to describe the woman's emotional turmoil in the passage?
  - iii. How does 'he' in the passage affect 'her' emotionally?
  - iv. What emotion does the woman express through her cry in the passage?
  - v. What does the iron railing symbolize in the passage?
  - vi. Which word is a good synonym for 'frenzy'?
- A. Nuances                      B. Choral

(A) Read the extracts given below and answer the questions that follow:

The first time on this shore,
The bell-beat of their wings above my head,
Trode with a lighter tread.
Unwearied still, lover by lover,
They paddle in the cold
Companionable streams or climb the air;
Their hearts have not grown old;
Passion or conquest, wander where they will,
Attend upon them still.

(The Wild Swans at Coole)

- i. What sound is heard above the speaker's head?
- ii. What do the creatures do in the cold streams?
- iii. How does the passage describe the creatures' hearts?
- iv. What theme is expressed by the line "Passion or conquest, wander where they will"?
- v. What is the tone of the poet regarding the creatures' journey and energy?
- vi. Choose the antonym for the word "unwearied" from the options below:
A. Trudge                      B. Fatigued
C. Energetic                  D. Trod

OR

(B) Read the extracts given below and answer the questions that follow.

To me thou, falsely thine;
And I to thee mine actions shall disguise.
The morning shadowes were away,
But these grow longer all the day,
But oh, loves day is short, if love decay.
Love is a growing, or full constant light;
And his first minute, after noone, is night

(A Lecture Upon The Shadow)

- i. What does the speaker say about the nature of love?
- ii. What does the speaker want to disguise?
- iii. What does the transition from day to night symbolize about love's duration?
- iv. How is love described after its "first minute"?

I	In Kubla Khan , Samuel Taylor Coleridge vividly illustrates the co-existence of opposites through the depiction of the sacred palace, which is both a symbol of grandeur and an embodiment of mystery. The poem describes the palace as a "stately pleasure-dome," a place of beauty and pleasure, yet it also hints at an underlying darkness, with its construction on "caverns measureless to man." The palace is situated near the "ancestral voices prophesying war," which introduces an element of destruction amidst its splendor.

I	Dr. Solomon Margolin's exploration of the lives of Holocaust survivors highlights the profound psychological and emotional impacts of their experiences. In his work, he delves into how the trauma of the Holocaust continues to shape the lives of survivors long after the physical horrors have ended. Margolin illustrates that the survivors often struggle with feelings of guilt, loss, and isolation, despite having survived such unimaginable suffering. He emphasizes how many survivors carry the burden of "survivor's guilt," feeling responsible for those who perished and haunted by memories of the atrocities they witnessed.  Margolin also focuses on the survivors' attempts to rebuild their lives, dealing with the challenge of reconstructing their identities in a world that has irrevocably changed. He discusses how survivors often internalize the trauma, leading to long-term psychological issues, yet also showcases the resilience and strength they display in their efforts to survive and find meaning in their post-Holocaust lives. This exploration gives voice to the continuing struggle of those who lived through the Holocaust and the ways in which they navigated the aftermath.

II	In "The Argumentative Indian," Amartya Sen emphasizes the significance of public reasoning as a cornerstone of democratic societies. Public reasoning, according to Sen, encourages the exchange of ideas, debate, and critical thinking, which strengthens democratic structures by fostering a culture of open dialogue. Indian tradition, with its rich history of debates and discussions, exemplifies the power of argumentation. Ancient Indian texts like the Upanishads and the Mahabharata show how public debates and dialogues were integral to resolving social, philosophical, and ethical questions. This tradition of argumentation encourages

	individuals to present reasoned arguments, listen to opposing views, and refine their understanding of issues. Sen argues that this tradition of reasoning is essential for democracy and development, as it allows for the participation of all citizens in the decision-making process, ensuring inclusivity and fairness. The Indian tradition thus contributes significantly to the global discourse by promoting a culture of rational discourse and democratic engagement in societal development.

12.	Answer any one of the following questions in 40-50 words.	1x3= 3
I	R.K. Narayan uses humour to address serious social and philosophical issues by blending satire with narrative, which softens the impact of his critiques while still delivering insightful commentary. For example, Raja, the tiger, serves as a vehicle for examining the human condition and societal norms. His thoughts and experiences are often recounted with a certain wry humour, such as his confusion about human behaviors. When Raja is captured and imprisoned, he struggles to understand the paradox of humans' cruelty and kindness, as well as their arbitrary power over animals, which raises questions about the nature of control and freedom.

II	In The Financial Expert , the Bank Manager plays a crucial role in Margayya's fall by exploiting his ambition and financial naivety. He manipulates Margayya into investing his wealth in a risky venture, leading to financial loss. Margayya's trust in the Bank Manager, combined with his blind ambition, ultimately results in his ruin, exposing the dangers of unchecked greed and deception. This highlights Margayya's moral blindness and how external influences exacerbate his downfall.
13.	Answer any one of the following questions in 120-150 words.	1X5=5
I	In A Tiger for Malgudi, Raja's transformation from a wild, untamed tiger to a subdued and introspective version of himself signifies the journey from chaos to balance, mirroring the broader themes of life, death, and liberation. Initially, Raja is driven by primal instincts, embodying the untamed force of life and survival. However, as he faces human intervention and the inevitability of his captivity, Raja undergoes a gradual process of self-realization and restraint. This transformation reflects the theme of life as a constant struggle between instincts and wisdom, survival and surrender. As Raja approaches death, he finds peace and balance, representing the liberation that comes from accepting one's fate. His final moments show that true freedom lies in self-acceptance and understanding one's place in the world. The novel suggests that liberation is not in escaping death, but in coming to terms with life's cycles and the inevitable nature of existence.

II	In The Financial Expert, R.K. Narayan subtly critiques social disparity and gender inequality through the portrayal of Margayya's wife and his son's wife. The contrasting roles and treatment of these two women highlight the entrenched gender norms and societal inequalities of the time. Margayya's wife is largely portrayed as a silent, subjugated figure in the novel. She represents the traditional role of women in society—restricted to the domestic sphere and expected to manage the household without questioning her husband's decisions. Her lack of voice in the narrative and her dependency on Margayya for her sense of security reflect the limited agency women had in the socio-economic structure of society at the time. Despite being a key part of the household, she does not hold any real power or influence over her husband's financial dealings or decisions. This reflects the social disparity where women were often relegated to passive roles and were not seen as active participants in economic or public life. In contrast to Margayya's wife, his son's wife, a young Brahmin girl, is depicted as someone with more influence within the family dynamic. However, she is still constrained by social expectations and the oppressive norms surrounding her behavior. While she does wield some influence in managing her household, her position is still secondary to that of the male members of the family. Her role is limited to maintaining domestic order and preserving the cultural traditions of the Brahmin community. This disparity between her and Margayya's wife highlights the rigid class-based and gender roles present in the society. These portrayals expose the entrenched social disparity and gender inequality that restricts women's empowerment and reinforces male dominance in economic and social spheres.
